For me, this past year as ASA President has been a year of many contrasts. I have learned much in this position and have met and worked with some fantastic people. I have also faced tough challenges and shared laughter and some sadness with all of you. Through the good and the bad, it has been a rewarding experience and I wish to thank the entire membership for providing me the opportunity to serve as President this past year.

As we prepare for the 32nd ASA Conference, Connecting Appalachia and the World Through Traditional and Contemporary Arts, Crafts, and Music, to be held March 27-29, 2009, at Shawnee State University in Portsmouth, Ohio, the following overview will give you a sense of the work and events that have occurred since March 2008.

First, the Steering Committee worked long and hard to begin the implementation of our Long Range Plan entitled The Road Ahead: ASA’s Plan for Action 2008-2013. The many accomplishments made on the Long Range Plan were outlined in the Fall 2008 issue of Appalink which can be found at www.appalachianstudies.org. All of this work resulted in numerous proposed by-law changes. A list of these proposed changes can be found in this newsletter. Please take the time to review these proposed by-law changes and become an informed voter. Voting will take place at the ASA business meeting during the conference on Saturday, March 28, at the noon meal.

Second, the tough challenge this year is raising funds for the conference. I will use a current, popular saying, “There is no I in team.” The monies raised thus far have been a joint effort of the Program Committee, Steering Committee, and myself. Grants were written, contacts were made, and arms were gently twisted. Deanna Tribe, Program Chair, has been instrumental in helping secure funding from sources in Appalachia Ohio. However, due primarily to the downturn in our economy, fundraising has been a most difficult task this year. So, please keep this in mind when attending the conference – prime rib will not be the main course at the banquet. We will provide you with a positive experience while still living within our budget.

Third, one of the goals of the Long Range Plan is to make ASA more participatory; therefore, a call went out recently for volunteers and several members responded. Thank you so very much. You will notice, however, there are still opportunities to get involved. We need a Website Chair; we need additional steering committee members; and we need members to volunteer for committees. With all the new technology, many of the meetings are conducted in a combination of in person, telephone, and TV linkup. This solves the dilemma of travel costs – so please consider volunteering.

And fourth, sadly we lost a good friend and colleague. Danny Miller passed away unexpectedly on November 9, 2008. Danny was chairperson for the English Department at Northern Kentucky University. He was a long time member of ASA, a professor of Appalachian literature, and an author. I always knew when Danny was around – I could hear his infectious laugh across a huge auditorium. And everyone knew that when they got close to Danny, they were sure to receive a big bear hug. I will surely miss Danny’s presence at the conference, but know he wants us to continue on with a smile on our faces and laughter in our hearts.

2009 Howard Dorgan Silent Auction

The Howard Dorgan Silent Auction has become a regular part of the Appalachian Studies Conference over the years. Howard Dorgan, from Appalachian State University, started the auction and ran it for many years with a dedicated cadre of volunteers. The success of the auction depends, first on people donating items and then, on people bidding on them.

What is appropriate to donate to the auction? Books are always popular. Handmade crafts and antiques are especially appreciated. Many household items that have outlived their usefulness have found happy homes with others. Several members have cleaned their offices and given us posters, magazines, or things not in active use. We have been the recipient of several regifted items. Sometimes I am good at guessing which things are popular and other times I am really surprised. I do know that everything is bid on—some just end up being better bargains than others.

At the conference do check the auction location several times. Bid often—it is for a good cause. Make sure that your friends have the satisfaction of helping us by bidding against them. You can help recycle useful items while making it possible for someone to attend our conference. In these difficult times, be generous in both giving and spending.

Our conference is unique in many ways because we strive to reflect the region that we celebrate and study. So, besides academics, we encourage artists, college students, activists, community organizers, writers, public school teachers, environmentalists, independent scholars, and anyone with an interest in the delights and problems of Appalachia to attend our yearly gathering. To back up our hospitality, we offer scholarships that cover the cost of registration.

Over the years, conference exhibitors, publishers, social service agencies, and area businesses have generously donated items to the auction. We have also had groups that are promoting a cause use the auction to help them get their messages out. However, the major portion of donations come from conference participants, who contribute gently used items, pass along no longer needed books or other resources, or make original crafts. So, please think of recycling things you no longer use or gifts that do not fit your lifestyle or sharing your personal creativity. You will be helping someone else attend the conference.

If you know of a business or institution in your area that would like to make a contribution to the auction, I can supply them with a receipt so that they can take the deduction on their taxes. We will be happy to hand our business cards or make a sign acknowledging the donation. Although I feel people give more readily if someone they know asks, I would be happy to contact a potential donor if you send me information on how to reach them.

You can either send items to me or bring them with you to the conference. The location of the auction will be posted at Registration. Getting items to me on either Thursday afternoon or Friday morning will be greatly appreciated. We will accept bids as soon as the bid sheets are made. The auction will close on Saturday, in the late afternoon.

Over the years, the auction has raised over $30,000. This year, we realize demands on the fund will be greater than usual, so please help us beat all the previous totals. Thanks.

New Craft Revival Website at Western Carolina University

Western Carolina University’s Hunter Library has received two grants to support its growing digital collection of early 20th century crafts. Under the direction of Research Professor Anna Fariello, the project has been awarded $47,000 from the Cherokee Preservation Foundation and $90,000 from the North Carolina State Library. The focus of this year’s research activity is the documentation of Cherokee baskets and basket makers and the production of a booklet, From the Hands of our Elders. Funding supports the development of an online digital archive, a series of web-based interpretive essays, and several student internships. To date, the project has received over $400,000 of Institute of Museum and Library Services funding. Project partners include: John C. Campbell Folk School, Museum of the Cherokee Indian, Penland School of Crafts, Qualla Arts and Crafts Mutual, and the Southern Highland Craft Guild. University partners include the Mountain Heritage Center and Hunter’s own Special Collections. “Western North Carolina’s Craft Revival focused national attention on a regional movement that produced a wealth of objects, identified traditional skills, and revitalized handmade production,” explained Fariello. The website — accessible from http://craftrevival.wcu.edu — currently holds 3,000 images in its database and over 100 pages of historical essays published on the site. “This collaborative undertaking promises to become a significant resource for material culture studies,” Fariello said.

Undergraduate Research Experience—Carbon Cycling and Appalachian Headwater Health

We invite students from all majors to join us for a summer research experience for undergraduates focused on watershed health in the Appalachian headwaters of Kentucky, jointly hosted by environmental researchers at Eastern Kentucky University and the University of Kentucky.

Participants in the 16-week program funded by the National Science Foundation will employ a variety of laboratory, field, and geotechnical approaches to examine carbon cycling and storage in soils and sediments in headwater streams, and the impacts of different surface coal mining methods on carbon budgets and erosion in forested and mined watersheds. The program will include two weeks of field camp centered at Lilley Cornett Woods in Letcher County, Kentucky—the first and largest preserved remnant of old-growth forest in eastern Kentucky.

Participants earn a $450 per week stipend, and housing will be provided on the UK campus in Lexington, Ky. Program dates are June 1 - August 7, 2009, and the application deadline is February 27, 2009. For more information and application materials visit http://www.eri.eku.edu//REU09/reu_home.html.
